VOLUMIZE YOUR BROWS

“Ever since fuller brows were on the runways for spring, clients have been asking how they can help their brows grow in,” says brow queen Anastasia Soare of Anastasia Beverly Hills. The newest techniques:

■ GROWTH BOOSTER Overplucking can leave brows patchy (some hairs are slower to grow back), so Soare developed Nú Brow, a serum containing Capigen, a blend of amino acids, peptides, and marine extracts that kicks follicles into the growth phase. She added collagen-boosting ingredients to the formula to strengthen the surrounding skin so that it’s a better base for new growth. Slick it on at night with the lip-gloss-like brush, and you may have fuller brows in as little as six weeks. ($35; sephora.com)

■ FABULOUS FILLER Want instant arches that look like the real thing? More Brows by ModelCo has ingeniously laced hairlike fibers into a quick-drying gel for a more authentic fill. Stroke it on, especially over bald spots, with the pen-shaped applicator. ($24; sephora.com)

■ SURGERY Brow transplants are now possible if your follicles are permanently damaged from scarring, burns, radiation treatment, or self-inflicted pulling. As with transplants for the scalp, individual hairs are taken from the back or side of the head, trimmed down, and then “micrografted” into tiny, needle-point-like incisions in the brow. “The transferred hair will fall out within two weeks, but the follicles remain in place, and you’ll see optimal new growth in about six months,” says Ken Washenik, M.D., Ph.D., medical director of Bosley hair-restoration experts. No need to fear the scary “doll hair” look; transplant techniques have come a long way, baby. ($3000 to $5000; bosley.com) mc
