#8 The next generation

of Botox: It's called No-tox

A chemical-free way to freeze frown lines? Indeed! Now stars can opt for a longer-lasting treatment that, as NYC cosmetic dermatologist Dr. Cameron Rokhsar explains, involves inserting two tiny needles into the area between the brows to transfer radio-frequency waves. The heat generated incapacitates the targeted nerves on both sides of the inner brows, decreasing function without immobilizing the entire area. The upside to the $2,000 treatment? While pricier than Botox, the effects can last up to two years. The downside? The effects can last up to two years — like it or not!

Nicole Kidman's furrow-free brow can now be achieved with just a little heat!
