

Monday March 19, 2007

Partying with the HairMax Laser Comb

Posted By: Carol Mangis

If you were under the impression that there's no glamour in gadget land, you are so wrong, my friend. To prove the point: Last week, Jen, Dan and I were invited to an exclusive gala to celebrate the FDA approval of the HairMax LaserComb. That's right--like Rogaine and Propecia, the HairMax officially promotes hair growth. Whoo!

We arrived at Manhattan's Bruno Jamais restaurant and were greeted with glasses of Champagne and delicious hors d'oeuvres. Circulating among the fashionable guests were celebrity impersonators. Why? We don't know, but they all toted Hair Maxes and pretended to use them throughout the night. We then spoke for a while with Lexington International's Randy Veliky about how the HairMax works. Through "the scientific principle of "Photo-Biostimulation," the lasers embedded in the product encourage follicles to ramp up hair production. Sadly, after examining Dan's head, Randy wasn't terribly encouraging. But that won't stop Dan from giving it a whirl. We'll let you know how it goes.

Top Right: Randy Veliky demos the HairMax for us.

Left: Faux Liza Minelli

Right: Dan makes friends with Marilyn Monroe

