

Jossip

Celebrity + Media + Manhattan

On Tuesday night, we sauntered all the way to the Upper East Side to Bruno Jamais Restaurant Club for the launch party of Skin Deep magazine. "What is Skin Deep?" you say? It's perhaps the only true competitor to ultra-glossy New Beauty, the recently launched cosmetic surgery magazine based in Boca Raton.

But Skin Deep isn't all plastic trash: It also focuses on anti-aging, skin care, and the latest raw diet that will help you drop those last 10 pounds in time for July's Orchid Ball in the Hamptons. Though we'd love to tell you more about the magazine, they were all out of copies before we left the event, so it looks like we'll be waiting for the Jan. 26 newsstand debut just like you.

In between oogling the rocks supermodel Carol Alt had around her neck (at least $250k, plus the bling-bling wrist action), we spent the night squeezing past the surprisingly portly ex-Apprentice Kwame Jackson, who we don't know a thing about aside from his continued attendance at the same parties we go to. Others included singer Samantha Cole, Armand Assante (who we just loved in Judge Dredd), and Court TV's Lynne White.

The next issue from editor Jeannette Martello (not only an M.D., but also a J.D.) hits in the spring, so look for Susan Lucci on the cover of a magazine that doesn't begin with Soap Opera and end with Digest.