

Art and Bubbly

April 26th, 2007

Part of my job is the (alas) chore of attending media events in celebration of various lines or launches. As you go to enough of them, you discover that some places do this well, and others, well, just don't. My favorite parties are always thrown by KMR Communications, and this week, they held the exclusive New York exhibition of the work of French artist Cyrille Margarit, whose work showcases digital images projected onto sheets of brushed aluminum. The event was held at Bruno Jamais on the Upper East Side of New York City, an elegant restaurant famous for its champagne (which I proudly imbibed my share of).
